[Numb. 876.]

The South-Carolina Gazette

From Monday February 18th, to Monday February 25th, 1751.

ALGIERS, September 20.

COMMODORE Keppel and Mr. Stanyford, miniſters plenipotentiary from his Britannick Majeſty, have omitted nothing that they thought might conduce to the obtaining the demands which the Britiſh nation has upon the regency of this ſtate, particularly in the caſe of the Prince Frederick packet boat: But, after much parleying, and exhauſting all their rhetorick, they became ſenſible that it was in vain to talk here of reſtitution. Therefore, Mr. Keppel judging it needleſs to make any longer ſtay, took his leave of the Dey the 18th inſtant, exhorting him to conſider once more, that a great king like his Britannick majeſty was not accuſtomed to demand ſatisfaction in vain; upon which the Dey made him the following anſwer.

'We are diſpoſed to give full ſatisfaction to the king and the Britiſh nation, for any thing that may happen amiſs hereafter; but as to what is paſt, if they had any cauſe to complain, they muſt think no more of it, and bury it in oblivion. Whilſt the packet boats of the crown of Great Britain are provided with the king's paſſports, they run no riſque of being ſtopt and ſeized, no more than the Engliſh merchantmen, if theſe take care to provide themſelves with our paſſes: But if either be neglected, the blame of any miſhap muſt be laid on thoſe who have been guilty of that negligence. And when the Engliſh merchantmen ſhall be deſtitute of Algerine powers, our privateers will think they have a right to take them, and the cargoes of ſuch ſhips ſhall be confiſcated. This is all we can do in this matter, &c.'

Mr. Keppel return'd on board his ſhip in the afternoon, and the next day the ſquadron ſailed for Port-Mahon, or England, we don't know which.

The reſtitution of the Prince Frederick packet boat was not the only point of the negotiation of the Britiſh plenipotentiaries: They alſo propoſed the granting to their nation, on the coaſt of the kingdom of Algiers, a ſettlement like that which the French African company has had for theſe ſeveral years paſt. To which the Dey made anſwer, 'That a ſetulement of this nature could but be productive of quarrels between the two nations; That moreover, in caſe the regency ſhould agree to it, it muſt needs be in conſideration of ſome important ſervice to be done by the Britiſh nation; and that if the Engliſh would help the Algerines to recover Oran from the Spaniards, they might be aſſured, in return for ſuch aſſiſtance, the regency would favour them in point of trade, all along the coaſt of Algiers, preferable to all other nations.'

One may eaſily judge, that Mr. Keppel did not give himſelf the trouble of canvaſſing a propoſition ſo chimerical, and which the Dey himſelf could not but be ſenſible was impracticable.

Leghorn, Sept. 18. The king of Pruſſia having determined to have conſuls at all the principal ports in Italy, for the advantage of the commerce of his ſubjects, a perſon from Berlin is already arrived at Naples with that character, as is likewiſe another in this city.

Paris, Oct. 5. A project is on the carpet for cutting a canal from Durance to paſs near Aix, and to go into the ſea above Marſeilles. The effecting this project will very much advance the commerce of Provence.

LONDON, October 27.

WE are aſſured that his grace the duke of Newcaſtle, ſet out this morning from the Hague for Calais; and that his Majeſty will certainly leave Hanover on Sunday or Monday next, on his return to England.

From Genoa we have advice, that they are actually regiſtering all the houſes, gardens, orchards, and other eſtates in and about that city, in order to tax them according to their value, and thereby create a fund for reſtoring the credit of the bank of St. George. As to the ſale or ceſſion of Corſica, in favour of a prince of the Spaniſh branch of the houſe of Bourbon, they are ſilent about it, though it is well enough underſtood that the courts of Verſailles and Madrid don't intend to leave that iſland in the hands of the Genoeſe.

London, Nov. 2. On Wedneſday night, about nine o'clock, a large party of ſoldiers and conſtables, with proper warrants, entered the notorious gaming-houſe behind the Hoop Tavern in the Strand, and took thirty-ſix perſons, and carried them all to the veſtry-room of St. Martin's, where the juſtices were ſitting for that purpoſe: Twenty one of them were yeſterday morning at two o'clock committed to the Gate Houſe for want of bail, and the others bound over on a recognizance of 80 l. to appear at the next quarter ſeſſions, to anſwer ſuch things as ſhould be there alledged againſt them. The fine tables, which muſt have coſt at leaſt 200 l. were broke and chopt to pieces, and great part burnt. There were Oxford ſcholars, templers, merchants, officers, Jews, life guardmen, tradeſmen, common gentlemen, footmen, chairmen, and others of the loweſt rank, ſeveral of whom were taken out of the chimneys and coal holes. Many of the principal inhabitants of St. Martin's (to their credit be it ſpoken) attended to ſee the warrants executed, and to prevent eſcapes.
